ALEX DUICU

SOLAR TAPES

WRITTEN BY:
ALEX DUICU

This document contains the entire lore of the analog horror series called Solar Tapes.
Thank you for your support for this project.

-Alex Duicu

SOLAR TAPES
EXTENDED LORE

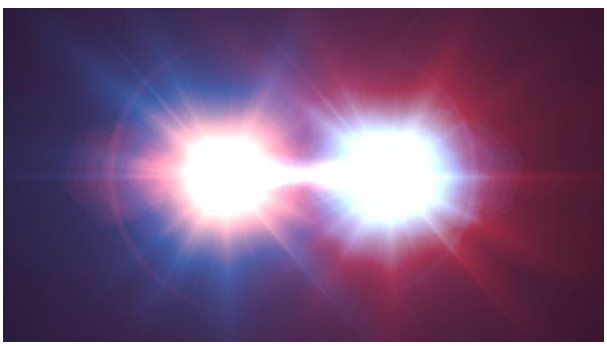
THE ORIGIN STORY

Genesis:

In the beginning, there was nothing: just an empty universe through which floated energy. This energy was later to be revealed as God to humanity. The pure existence of this energy gives meaning to existence because this energy constitutes the Supreme Good composed of happiness and love. For this energy to fulfill itself, it needed to offer what it is to other realities. Thus, the energy began to move light away from darkness, creating a great explosion from which matter emerged. The matter was used to create stars that emit light. Many of the stars were given planets to orbit around them, and only a few of them were given the necessary conditions to sustain a precious gift that can only come from this energy, called life. Life is as rare as it is precious. So precious that if you don't take care of it, it can disappear before you know it. The creative energy is of a higher nature than the nature of its creations, so it exists in a transcendent world while finite realities exist in a physical world.

The Origin of Evil:

For the Supreme Good to be fully fulfilled, it is not enough just to offer what it has created to its creations, but also to prove that it will not change. Thus, another energy was born from it called the Supreme Evil. This energy, instead of accepting the fact that the Supreme Good is the ruler of the universe, decided to revolt and try to become the new ruler. Evil tried to tempt Good by convincing it to betray its qualities and work together. The Supreme Good could not accept the offers of Evil, so the two energies fought until Good pushed Supreme Evil out of the universe created by it. Now that



Supreme Evil is free in another barren place, it has begun to create a universe according to its own will. Since Good and Evil are completely opposite, the universe created by Evil is the opposite of the universe created by Good. Light is black, and darkness is white, and death is opposed to life. However, there is one thing common to both energies...the fact that both seek happiness, but one seeks it in the right way, and the other seeks it in wrong ways. Because of this, the two universes will have something in common, that being the fact that the black holes in the universe of Good are connected to the white holes in the universe of Evil. All matter swallowed by a black hole emerges through a white hole in the other universe. Supreme Evil wants to conquer the universe of Good, so it will use Hawking Radiation to slowly make matter from its universe appear in the universe of Good.

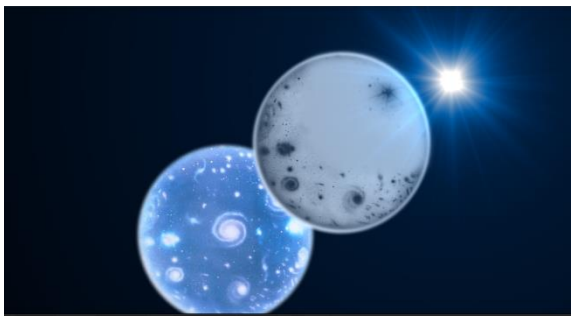
Distorted Space:



Distorted Space is the universe created by evil and is organized into three tiers: the first tier is called the 'Realm of the Dead,' where various planets are located. These planets have the ability to speak due to the Supreme Evil controlling them. The first planet is called Theia. This planet resembles Venus in that it was very hot. It was the first planet chosen by the Supreme Evil to go into the universe of the Good One to destroy humanity. Another planet from this Realm is Nibiru which is inhabited by the souls of those who died in the dimension of the Good. This is because Distorted Space blocks the souls' access to the Supreme Good. Nibiru was supposed to become the second planet to be sent to destroy humanity. There are also other planets in the Realm of the Dead like Pollutio, Bellum, Artificialis. The second tier is called the 'Realm of White Holes,' where matter is sucked in by these white holes and is manipulated in order to exit through the Black Holes in the other universe. The matter from the universe of the Good, sucked in by black holes, is immediately annihilated after it emerges into Distorted Space, taking into account the regime of manipulation of the Supreme Evil and its desire to conquer the other universe. Moreover, White Holes do not possess what humans have termed in the normal universe as Hawking Radiation because their purpose is for only the matter from Distorted Space to end up in the realm of the Supreme Good. By using white holes, Evil conquers the universe of the Supreme Good through Distorted Space. The third tier is called the 'Realm of Divinity,' and it is where the Supreme Evil is seated. On his throne, he observes his entire universe and controls it with the aim of conquering.

The Appearance of Earth:

The Supreme Good decided to create a solar system consisting of 8 planets, one of which was to be called Earth. This planet was designed to sustain the rare and priceless force in the universe called life. This life was to lead to the emergence of many species of animals, as well as a unique species called humans. Until Earth was formed to meet the necessary needs of life, Supreme Evil decided to send one of its own planets called Theia into the universe of Good to collide with Earth. Theia possesses the malevolent powers of Evil, and its purpose is to corrupt humans and ultimately destroy the planet while its universe swallows from the universe of Good. The souls of the dead become trapped on the planets of Distorted Space. The Supreme Good created humans to explore the world created by Good, to seek truth and happiness. Because Good loves humans so much and for everything to be well in the universe, humans were left to decide their own fate, either they choose to do good, or they choose to do evil. The Supreme Good doesn't control anyone's decisions, and it also protects the universe from the outside to ensure its privacy. Also in the universe of the Good, there are no tiers because everything is equal. Unfortunately, Distorted Space, the realm of Evil, violates the freedom of the universe created by Good...

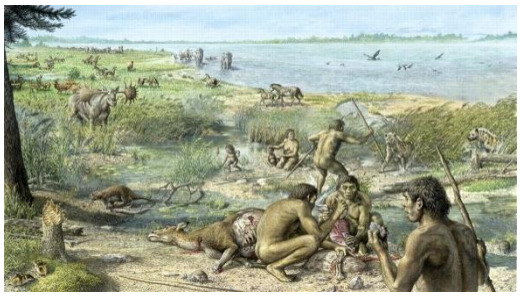
History of Mankind:



Because humans were blessed with the gift of freedom, not all of them chose to do good; some also chose to do evil, considering that the interior of the planet was influenced by the presence of Theia which caused humanity to fall in sin. However, the Supreme Good throughout time has endowed various individuals with the mission of combating evil and doing good. Many people decided to distance themselves from the Creator and seek happiness through inappropriate means. Others chose to invent various idols to replace the Supreme Good. People no longer believed in true prophecies but turned to the divination of the stars. Some began to kill in the name of their ideals. Later on, money became the new god of people. After the industrial revolution, humans no longer took care of the planet and started to pollute it in order to invent all sorts of machinery to make their lives easier. Due to political discontent, people began to invent political regimes to elevate themselves in place of divinity, causing even more problems in society. Eventually, people realized that their poor decisions had given rise to a phenomenon called global warming, which would later bring about the end of the planet...

THE MAIN STORY

COLLECTION 1

Wartime Safety:

In 1970, the U.S. Department of Defense intended to create an informational tape about surviving in a global military conflict in the context of nuclear weapons development. Unfortunately, the producers were unable to collaborate in such a way as to convey a clear message to humanity. The production of the tape titled "Wartime Safety" was a disaster. It ended up being a film that conveyed a combination of contradictory messages. Due to these problems, the tape was never released to the public.

An authorized person decided to investigate the mystery behind this tape. He entered the dark room where the materials were located at night so as not to be caught by anyone. First, he watched the film. The film begins by showing the information that the tape was initially approved on 08.26.1970. Then it begins to present a guide to protecting your family in case of conflict. It is reminded that humanity has been fighting wars since it exists, but in recent decades, scientists have developed nuclear weapons. Considering the wild nature of man, they would certainly want to use these dangerous weapons to dominate. Then the two types of war are presented: the classic and the nuclear. Nuclear war is the most dangerous because of the emitted radiation that can contaminate the environment, damage genetics, and cause cancer. Then the ways in which you can protect yourself in such a catastrophe are presented. You can hide in a bunker while the radiation is still in the atmosphere, but you will need a lot of dry food to survive. The second way is to move to Switzerland. Switzerland is surrounded by mountains, which protect it from the nuclear danger. The third option, however, is a bit bizarre: to enlist in the army in case the war has not escalated to a nuclear one because civilians are killed by enemies and/or left to die of hunger, so it is better to be under the protection of your army. For a second, it even aggressively urges you to join the army. After the film apparently interrupts and begins to transmit bizarre messages. First, it subtly tells you to take your life if you have no way to protect yourself, then it begins to philosophize about human condition. Man is outlined as a being who wants to reach the absolute but does not know how and resorts to wrong ways that will cost him his existence. Reaching the absolute is impossible without absolute truth, which humanity denies. No matter how much people try to escape these mistakes, the decadent condition will attract them to Hades. Then a biblical quote appears about wars and the prophecy of the end of the world. Finally, for a fraction of a second, the information appears that the film has not been distributed to the public.

The researcher noticed from watching the film that it seems to have missing slides

if you look closely at the slide number in the film. The film can only run the images that the producers put in the film reel. In addition to this, some slides do not seem to have a place in the reel due to contradictory information. The researcher also looked around the room and found a weird slide that was apparently not put into the film. It is slide 12 which shows the consequences of such a nuclear war. The strange thing is that in theory, slide 12 exists in the official video, but it takes the form of a conclusion. He thought that some of the film's production intentionally removed that slide from the film to hide what the consequences of such an attack would be, and they also inserted information to encourage enlistment in the army. These individuals may be adherents of the far-right ideology. Others just wanted to make a simple film to teach you how to protect yourself, and others who are more religious introduced prophetic messages regarding wars.

The detective decided to bring all this information to light, but shortly afterward, he was assassinated. The killer was never caught, but most likely, it was one of the nationalists who promoted pro-war ideas.

Trash Sending:

Over the years, the issue of pollution and global warming has become increasingly pressing. People have come to understand that if they continue to throw garbage into nature, the air will become polluted and temperatures will rise more than is normal. Because of this, NASA became concerned about the future of humanity. First, in 1977, it sent Voyager 1 and Voyager 2 probes into space to study the solar system, hoping that humanity would one day colonize it. Second, in 1979, NASA attempted a project to collect as much garbage as possible and then launch it into space. After the garbage was collected from several cities in the United States, it was deposited into rockets and sent into space. In space, the rockets released the garbage to float around. The plan seemed to be successful until the garbage was pulled by the Earth's gravity and fell back to the ground, causing disasters in several cities. A photographer happened to be on a hill near the city of Asheville, North Carolina, when the garbage was falling back. The photographer, of course, took a picture illustrating the garbage rain, showing it as if it were meteorites falling on the city. The citizens panicked and tried to hide in basements. The photographer fled into the woods to protect himself from the explosions caused by the speed at which the garbage was falling. After the city was devastated, the photographer emerged from the woods and went into Asheville. In the city, he saw nothing but garbage everywhere, dead and injured people, and, above all, felt that he could barely breathe because of the pollution. He found a broken camera on the ground and intentionally took a picture of it so that he could report on the disaster caused by this seemingly saving plan. Some people thought that we should not run away from our own mistakes because they will continue to haunt us but stop making them... others think it is too late to fix them.

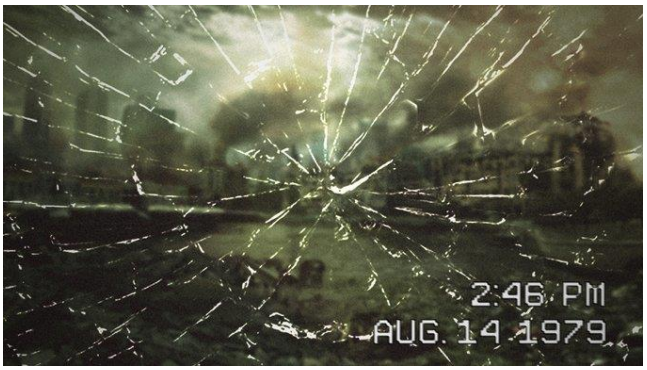
Later that year, an animated film was made on film to educate people in this regard. The tape is the property of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and is called "Protection of the Environment". The guide starts by presenting how lucky we are as a species to live on a planet like Earth and how much we take it for granted. Irresponsibly thrown garbage creates problems all over the world, and it is time for a change before it is too late. The proposed solution is recycling. If everyone started recycling, the garbage would not end up in landfills and the environment would not be contaminated. The producers then wondered what could be done with garbage that cannot be recycled. Since they did not come up with a solution to this problem, they resorted to presenting what happened when NASA intended to launch garbage into space, subtly conveying the idea that humanity is doomed and it is too late, and released the film.



This film caused some people to lose hope for a better future for humanity. Some felt guilty for this tragedy.

Space Research:

13 years after NASA sent the Voyager 1 and 2 probes into space, Voyager 1 took the last picture of our planet on February 14, 1990. This photo later became known as The Pale Blue Dot. After taking this famous photograph, Voyager 1 closed its cameras and left the Solar System. However, something unreal happened that completely baffled NASA. The probe continued to take pictures even though the cameras were closed until the signal was permanently interrupted. The new pictures, which should not have existed, showed an unidentified object distorting space. Like a Black Hole? Except it couldn't be because everything was white, and there was no gravitational force. Scientists analyzed the pictures and concluded that the distorted space reflected space itself, making light black and darkness white. Additionally, some strange signals emitted by stars were detected in that area. Almost as if they had life. All the pictures highlighting the distorted space are classified and can only be viewed by NASA personnel with a security clearance level 6.

Later that year, NASA, in collaboration with some filmmakers, produced an educational tape that presented humanity's achievements in recent decades. The film was titled "Space Research" and began by presenting data on the launch of the two space probes. The first being Voyager 2, followed 16 days later on September 5, 1977, by Voyager 1. Both probes contain the Golden Record, which includes a variety of images and sounds to show extraterrestrials what life on Earth is like in case one of the probes is captured. By the end of 1977, Voyager 1 had surpassed its cousin and began photographing the gas giant planets. By the early 1980s, Voyager had sent images of the gas giant planets and even their natural satellites back to Earth. At the end, it took the infamous photograph, and the film was supposed to end.

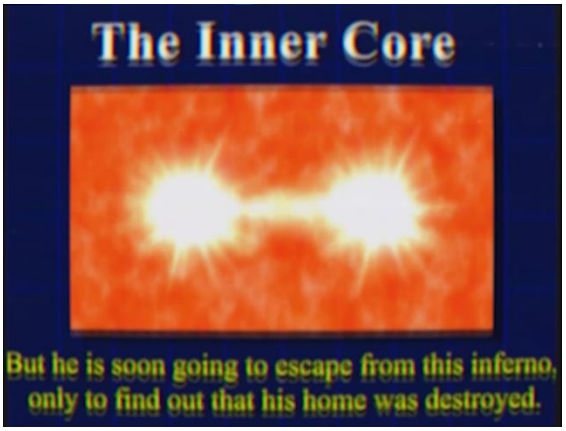
The film continues to show pictures of the distorted space because a producer accidentally discovered those pictures while doing research at NASA for the project. He wanted to show humanity what NASA was hiding, so he illegally inserted them into the film. As a result, he and those responsible for producing the material were fired. There has been no news about them since then...

Earth’s Structure:

In 1992, the U.S. Geological Foundation sent a team of archaeologists to investigate the largest hole ever dug by humanity. This is the Kola Superdeep and it is located on the Kola Peninsula in the Russian Federation. When the archaeologists arrived to investigate the hole, they heard rumors from the locals that screams could be heard from inside the hole. Despite this fact, the archaeologists boldly continued to reach the hole and descend into it. After they descended to investigate, none of them returned to the surface.

As the archaeologists did not return, the U.S. Geological Foundation urgently sent a team of mountain rescuers in September 1992 to go there and see what happened to them. The rescuers also heard the rumor that screams could be heard from inside the hole. When they arrived there, they looked into the hole and saw an orange light shining in the middle of the dark hole. They took some pictures, investigated the situation a bit, and left without being able to save the archaeologists. However, their interaction with the hole and therefore with the creature inside it made them influenced by its curse. After they returned to the United States to report the news, the U.S. Geological Foundation was contaminated with the curse of the rescuers who came from Theia.

Later in 1992, the U.S. Geological Foundation released an educational film on cassette entitled "Earth's Structure" which presents the genesis and layers of the Earth. The first 2 minutes of footage present the origin of the Solar System, the origin, and evolution of our planet. The theory is presented that a planet the size of Mars called Theia collided with Earth when it was still forming. The pieces of the planet Theia that remained in space led to the formation of the Moon. However, it is believed that some pieces remained in the Earth's core. The next part of the film presents information about the layers of the Earth. After the film was completed, it was released to the public. However, the public who watched the cassette had a shock. At the end of the cassette where the Inner Core is presented, a creature trapped in the middle of the Earth is revealed that wants to escape from there. And when it escapes from Earth, it will discover that its home has been destroyed. After the cassette stops for a few seconds and then returns to normal.



After the film was released, the cassettes were purchased and then returned due to the "error." The reason for this anomaly is because those who made the film contracted the curse of Theia from the foundation members which cursed the film. Unfortunately, what was worse had already been done because all the people who watched the cassette were influenced by the curse of the creature trying to come out of the Earth's core. Those people were to transmit the curse to others, leading to a pandemic of Theia's curse.

Space Survival:

Later that year, some game developers who had contracted the curse were working on a game for the NES console called "Space Survival" at an unknown third-party company. The company was immediately cursed, including the game. In November 1992, the game was released. In this game, you are the only person left on Earth as the rest of humanity has taken off into space. Your mission is to collect the 5 elements of nature: Earth, Water, Fire, Air, and Space so they can be used in the next mission of terraforming other planets. At the beginning, you are next to a rocket but you go to the right and advance. In the first level, the player collects all elements except Space. The majority of elements are collected from the ground, while for Air (and to cross a lake), the player jumps on the branches of trees. They go up to the top to collect the Air, then walk through the tree branches to reach the other side of the lake. After collecting all the elements, the player goes back through the trees to reach the rocket. The astronaut puts on their helmet and enters the rocket, which takes off into space. In level two, the astronaut exits the rocket and has to jump over some platforms to reach the Distorted Space to collect Space from there. The player moves up by jumping on platforms, avoiding asteroids, or even using asteroids to jump to more distant places until they reach the top and touch Distorted Space. At that moment, the player is informed that our origins have been revealed and it is impossible to escape the consequences of our actions. Suddenly, an orange anomaly emerges from the ground and heads towards the player without any possibility of escape. When the astronaut is touched by the anomaly, the game glitches and shows the Game Over screen. After the developers realized that the game was glitched, it was withdrawn from stores. Those who bought and played it were contaminated with Theia's curse

Meteorological Predictions:

As the years go by, humanity is increasingly falling into sin, and the curse of Theia continues to spread while Space Distorted approaches closer and closer to the Solar System. Because of this, supernatural anomalies seem to occur, as if taken from the biblical prophecies of the Apocalypse.

In July 1999, the weather was being broadcast on Public 68 news channel in North Carolina. Everything was fine until the broadcast was hijacked with a text saying "Signs of the end times". The weather report resumed, anticipating that it would warm up in the following weeks. The television glitched and repeated the weather report, alarming that the clouds disappeared and the temperatures suddenly increased. The bottom bar presented the fact that the Sun began to emit purple light and the effects of this light were unknown. Civilians were alerted to take shelter.

The broadcast glitched again, showing mysterious symbols for a few fractions of a second. On Thursday, a white sun and the text "God" without temperature were shown, symbolizing purity. On Friday, a pink sun, the word "Love", and a temperature of 6 degrees were illustrated. The number 6 is associated with the goddess Venus in numerology. On Saturday, a shining yellow sun with no text and a temperature of 777 degrees was represented. 777 is the symbol of the Sabbath day, the day sanctified by God in the Old Testament. On Sunday, a red sun, the word "Space", and a temperature of 0 degrees were shown. Sunday corresponds to the day of the Sun god, representing paganism and sin. "Space" emphasizes that humanity will colonize space precisely because of its own sin. Monday is revealed with a black sun, the text "Void", and a temperature of minus infinity degrees. Monday emphasizes the condemnation of humanity to weekly work, and the black, Void, and non-existent temperature emphasize the fate of humanity, annihilation.

After this scene, footage received from different witnesses is broadcasted. The first scene shows a person outside who witnessed the sun changing to purple. The second scene shows a person on the beach as the sea turns into blood. The third person filmed the moon turning into a bloody moon. At the end, the weather is shown in a glitchy way. The sun symbol is purple, precipitation, humidity, and wind are non-existent, the temperatures are terribly high, the water is blood, and the text on the bar says that the world is experiencing end times as prophesized in the biblical prophecies of the Apocalypse. And it glitches again, and the broadcast returns to normal.

After the world watched the program, they looked out the window and could feel that something was not right. The meteorological anomaly was real and cost many people their lives. During the anomaly, a person took a picture on the beach at the Atlantic Ocean, which turned out to be bloody. That person was hospitalized and diagnosed with cancer, most likely due to the purple light emitted by the Sun. Religious people warned that these disasters occur because humanity has not repented, and the end is near.

Deductive Simulation:

In January 2001, scientists at the U.S. Institute of Technology attempted a new experiment to demonstrate the existence of Hawking Radiation. The theory is that all matter that enters a black hole cannot escape after crossing the event horizon. Instead, black holes emit a form of radiation that was named after the person who theorized it. It is also believed that matter that does not exit the Black Hole could possibly emerge in another universe through a White Hole. To demonstrate Stephen Hawking's theory, scientists created an analog Black Hole that does not capture light but can capture sound. While working on the project, they recorded all the data and compiled all the footage into a film called "The Black Hole Simulation". However, when they filmed the result of the experiment, something terrible happened. Indeed, the hole emitted a little of the sound it captured, proving Hawking's theory. But when they looked on the "other" side of the hole, the scientists heard an extremely loud sound that made them deaf. From this tragedy, it was revealed that matter ingested by a black hole emerges on the other side, proving that there are multiple alternative universes connected by black holes and their opposite, white holes. The tape containing the film was not released at the time due to the incident.

On January 29th, a detective learned of the deafened scientists at the institute and decided to investigate the case. After entering the building, he stumbled upon the tape made by the experimenters and watched it. The film begins with the presentation of theories about Black Holes, on a quite eerie musical background. This is because the film was contaminated by the curse. Then it continues with the explanation of the experiment. In the background, in addition to the ambient sounds, some extremely strange sounds can be heard that the detective couldn't ignore. He continued to watch, and after the explanation, the actual experiment footage is shown in two sections. The first section shows the hole, which is a purple light that receives some sound, but only a small part of it emits outside. The second section shows the same thing, but from a diffe rent angle. What is observed is that on the "opposite side," all the light that was ingested emerges outside. Also, the light is no longer purple but yellow. This happens because yellow is the opposite color of purple. Black Holes in our universe connect with White Holes in Space Distorted because everything is opposite there. The two spaces connect paradoxically.

The detective began to decode the strange sounds from the film. Eventually, he discovered that there was a voice that said: "Black holes are the mirrors of our universe. They hide the truth about our origin. The truth will be revealed to us through our disasters. It's not too late to turn back, but the world has already chosen the destructive way of living."

Astrological Predictions:

In November 2001, the most dramatic event took place at Public 68, as many employees were laid off due to a TV program called "Astrology Zone". This program was created to present people's horoscopes, a pagan concept. The individuals who came up with this idea were influenced by the curse of Theia. The first part of the program presented all the zodiac signs to highlight the characteristics of each viewer. In the second part of the program, predictions about the future were made, all of which were influenced by the powers of evil. However, once, the religious employees who did not allow themselves to be cursed by Theia had the audacity to edit the program one day, so in the second part, they presented the history of evil in humanity and how this path will bring us to our end. When the program was already airing, one of the cursed employees realized the edit and immediately rewound the program, making a jump directly to the end.

Due to this incident, all employers responsible for the "Astrology Zone" program were laid off on grounds of negligence.

Hyperborean Pathfinders:

In 1985, a group of people called the "Hyperborean Pathfinders" set out on a mission to colonize Antarctica, the only continent uninhabited by humans. The goal of this mission was to discover new information about the mysterious world in the southern hemisphere and to become the first humans to inhabit it. These brave individuals planned to dedicate their entire lives, and even their children's lives, to living in this part of the world. The team traveled by ship to the South Pole, and upon their arrival, they began constructing shelters to keep warm, conduct research, and discuss their findings. As a result of this ambitious project, Public 68 launched a new television program to report on the team's achievements, presenting a short history of these people with each broadcast.

Over time, more and more team members began to mysteriously disappear. On November 7, 1999, the team discovered a buried camera in the snow. They retrieved the camera and found a photo of a storm inside, concluding that it belonged to a member who had died in the storm.

More than 20 years later, when global warming caused by human activity began to become a problem, the Hyperborean Pathfinders discovered a massive hole in the Twaites Glacier. Using an underwater robot, they recorded a temperature of 2 degrees Celsius at an altitude of 700 meters. Due to warming, the entire Arctic region would be destabilized, and sea levels would rise by 61 meters, causing many coastal cities to be swallowed up by water.

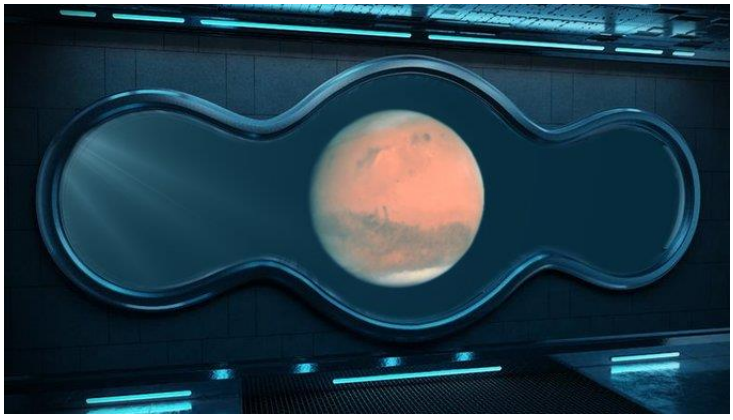
Not long after, global warming melted Antarctica entirely. It began to sink into deep waters and crumble apart. As a result of this catastrophe, all the animals died, and many people perished. Those who survived climbed aboard the old ship, which no longer worked after decades, and sent an urgent message. The message was transmitted just as Public 68 aired a program about the Hyperborean Pathfinders, presenting the team's findings on the future of the continent in the "Antarctica Updates" section. At the end of the report, a map of the land affected by global warming was shown. In the final frames, the screen turned red due to the curse of Theia affecting the television station. After the broadcast ended, the channel was hijacked by the survivors' urgent message, which showed a fiery hand emerging from the oceans for a few frames. That hand belonged to Theia. In that message, the survivors asked for help in the context of the continent's destruction. They continued to say that it was humanity's fault for this situation. If people hadn't caused so much harm, such as polluting nature, this catastrophe would not have happened.

Fortunately, those who survived the disaster were rescued shortly afterward by mountaineers and airlifted out. As they flew away, someone took a photo of what remained of Antarctica: some melted islands with an orange light burning in their midst. That light was the proximity of Theia to escape from Terra!

Celestial Exodus:

Over time, people have become increasingly aware that Earth will no longer be inhabitable due to global warming. As a result, they began to develop the necessary technology to live in space, specifically in spaceships. People built a spaceship for each country on the planet, and they were distributed among them based on nationality. Before humanity left the planet they were born on, they collected what was left of Earth's elements to use for terraforming other planets in the distant future. When humanity had already taken off into space, almost all life on Earth had died. Temperatures were terrifyingly high, and the seas were evaporating. Spaceships floated close to Earth's atmosphere.

Sometimes before the year 2090, people created a mass media network called "Humanitas Network" to connect with each other. The Humanitas Network is essentially the internet adapted for their situation. Through this unique network, people can connect to information, communicate, and do what they could do when they were on Earth. The basic idea of this unique network is to bring unity to this already divided species by all the damage caused.



Scientists began working on technologies to terraform planets. The biggest dream was to terraform Earth's neighbor, Planet Mars, to transform it from a Red Planet into a green paradise like Earth used to be. Then the plan was for humanity to colonize the entire solar system and take control.

Unfortunately, an alarm signal came unexpectedly. It was discovered that something dangerous was about to emerge from inside the ruined planet, posing a threat to humanity. It could be observed how Earth was going to break into pieces like an egg while its surface melted away. As a result, the spaceships started to move away from Earth and began to colonize other planets in the solar system. Some went to Venus, others to Mars... The Humanitas Network started to glitch due to Theia's strong influence and began transmitting threatening messages. Theia subtly revealed its identity by saying, "Our Planet's history is coming to an end. Its origins are bringing its end." Immediately after this, Theia had the strength to remove its hands, feet, and head from inside the planet, completely destroying it.

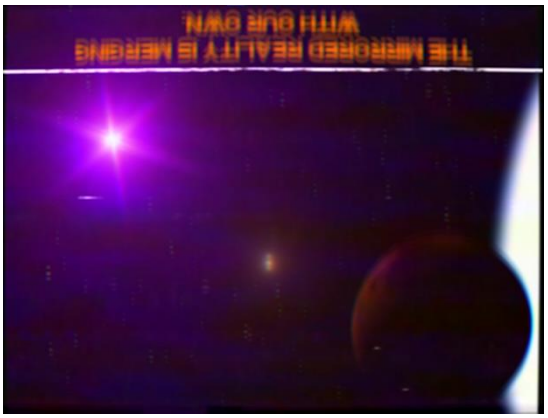
COLLECTION 2

Colonizing:

The spaceships began to separate, settling on other planets within the Solar System. Humans managed to partially repair the Humanitas Network and reconnect. Unfortunately, even though humans regained control of the network, Theia had already contaminated it with her curse, so it would not function entirely as it should. Due to the recovery of the network by the year 2095, people cooperated to plan the creation of a spacefaring society. Some people went to colonize the planets, while others remained in space for the development of space shuttles. Various spacecraft would be used for different purposes. A massive shuttle called 'Humanitas Station' or ‘Humanitas Network Spaceship’ would operate in the Solar System as a government for all human colonies. In addition to the goal of keeping humanity in check, it has a symbolic purpose: to remind us that we are one species despite living on different planets and that we must continue to be united to survive. Those who were building Humanitas Station also embarked on developing the Heimdall A.I. program, designed to function as a live map for those who would be working at Humanitas. The program was completed 11 years later, in the year 2106. Other smaller shuttles will be used to transport people from one planet to another for tourism for various reasons, whether to visit friends and relatives in other colonies or for relaxation and travel. Some shuttles will be used to protect colonies from external threats as a military force. Others will be used to explore what is still unknown about the Solar System and space so that humanity can continue to make progress.

Our Journey Beyond:

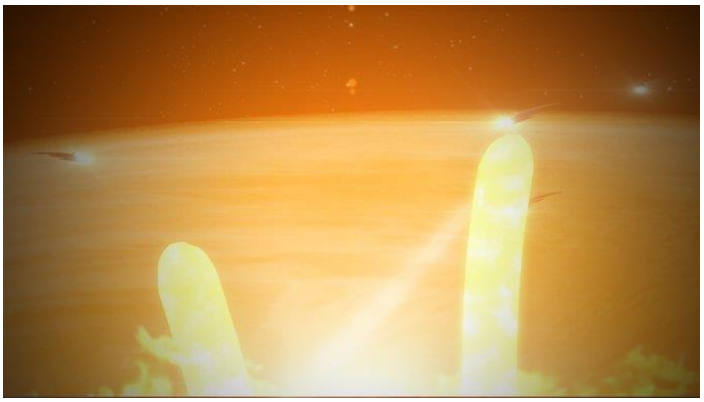
Not long after, the Government ordered the creation of a guide in the form of a video material to showcase the human colonization of the Solar System. The guide begins by presenting, in the first half, the planets that will be colonized by humans. The first planet is Venus. This planet will not be terraformed due to the conditions, but floating cities will be built above the clouds. At the top of the clouds on Venus, temperatures and pressure are similar to those on the ancient Earth, so humans can live there. The second planet on the list is Mars. The Red Planet has more favorable conditions compared to Venus, so people will terraform the planet when technology allows. Until then, they will live in colonies. Inside the colonies, people will live as on Earth, but when they leave the colonies, they will have to wear astronaut suits. The third "planet" is not a planet but one of Saturn's moons: Titan. This moon was chosen because it is the only one with a dense atmosphere and the only object in space, apart from Earth, that has liquid water. Beneath Titan's surface are oceans made of water that can support life. The colonization process will be similar to that on Mars. In the second half of the film, the spacecraft and their roles are presented. The shown spacecraft are not real; they are improvised toys. The real ones were still under construction. From here, the material starts to glitch. In one frame, Space Distorted appears for a few fractions of a second with the text "...Or wander in the unknown..." in the context of presenting transport shuttles. In the next frame, Theia's hand appears for a second in the context of presenting spacecraft for planet protection. Furthermore, the sun turns purple for a second at the end in the scene presenting spacecraft for space research, then the image glitches. Then, an inexplicable chaotic scene is shown where the sun turns purple, and Distorted Space conquers the entire Solar System with yellow text in a mirrored writing style: "The Mirrored reality is merging with our own." The reason this text appears this way is that in Distorted Space, everything is opposite to our universe. Then the guide ends almost abruptly. In the meantime, some exploration spacecraft went missing after carrying out activities at the edge of the Solar System. Because of this, the government sent protective spacecraft on a special mission to investigate what happened. When they reached near the edge of the Solar System, they encountered a strange white force. That force was, of course, Distorted Space, but no one knew about this phenomenon because it had been kept secret by NASA for so long. They attempted to investigate what was happening, but immediately they felt the spacecraft shaking, and astronauts experienced nausea and illusions. They took a picture and flew back to Humanitas Network.



On Venusian Affairs:

When some of the spacecraft arrived on Venus, people managed to adapt easily to the new lifestyle as they still lived in larger spacecraft designed to function as floating cities. The completion of these colonies took place around the year 2110. In these cities, airports were built for transportation to other floating cities or even to other planets, cinemas, places for various attractive activities, and of course, laboratories. People started installing various cameras for filming across all colonies and even through the planet's atmosphere between the other colonies. The reason is that the Venusians created their own specific television called 'Venus TV,' where everything happening on the planet is broadcasted. Through all these things, the Venusians have created a society based on science, technology, and philosophy.

Unfortunately, this Venusian world will not last indefinitely as Theia swam through space to reach Venus. It entered the planet's atmosphere on a side where the Venusian colonies were not present, avoiding detection by protective spacecraft. Thus, no one was aware of the creature's arrival. In September, during 'The Venusian Spaceship Race Tournament,' where five athletes competed in a race through Venus's atmosphere from one city to another, Theia approached menacingly and began to affect them. On September 15, the green spacecraft disappeared when it entered the clouds, where it was struck by lightning. The lightning originated from Theia. In the end, only 4 athletes finished the race, as the fifth one died in Theia's clutches. When the final rankings were displayed on television, the 5th place showed no name, then the image glitched. This was because Theia had started manipulating Venus TV. The next day, on September 16, there was a spaceship launch at the airport. These ships were supposed to reach Mars, but after takeoff, they suddenly lost all their fuel in the air and crashed. The last thing the poor people managed to see before they died was a kind of firestorm in front of their eyes. The live TV broadcast abruptly cut off because Theia was trying to hide. However, the Venusians realized that something had visited the planet and started investigating the issue. On September 17, the day when scientists were supposed to present some achievements on television, they proposed the theory that the reason the last athlete disappeared inexplicably and the two transport ships suddenly fell was due to a creature that arrived. Scientists realized that this entity is composed of plasma and elements unknown to humanity, haunting among the colonies in the atmosphere. Scientists are doing their best to find solutions to protect Venusian society from the creature's danger. Towards the end of the broadcast, Theia briefly showed its hand, then abruptly cut off. Theia began to attack Venus TV even more to make it malfunction completely. On the last day of the Venusian colonies, on September 18, Theia began to ruthlessly attack all the colonies."



Venusians desperately tried to escape the planet to save themselves from Theia. Unfortunately, most were not fortunate and died in Theia's presence, while the rest fled in desperation. Those who managed to escape, unfortunately, were unable to escape Theia's curse. As people flew into space, someone took a picture of Venus's atmosphere, which was being destroyed by Theia, who kept trying to go higher to catch them all. This was the last day for Venus TV. What was saved has been archived under the name 'On Venusian Affairs.' Scientists conducted further research and realized that this entity was at the center of planet Earth.

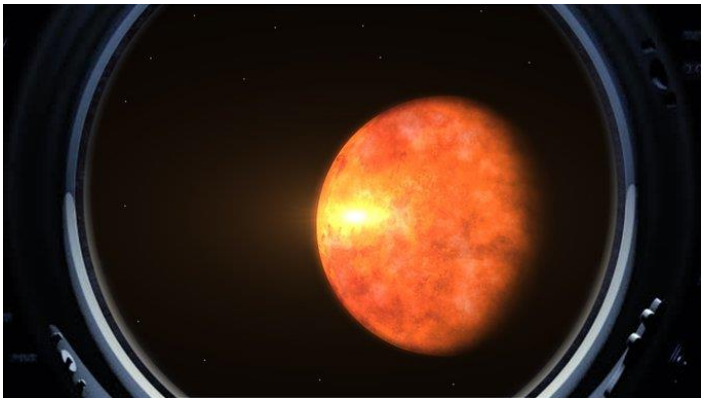
The Martian Dillemma:

Some of the spacecraft that fled from Theia's threat when Earth was just becoming what used to be, landed on the red planet. Initially, astronauts found themselves in a barren world with no signs of life, no magnetic field, exposing the surface to solar radiation. Thus, people had to embark on building a new society on Mars. Simultaneously, to have the necessary tools for this society, Martians had to develop a technology company called 'Elysium Robotics.' Martians built several colonies, each featuring a vast garden, blocks, and other essential institutions. These colonies are Ares, Tyr, Montu, Mangala. To make life possible and encourage vegetation development, all colonies are protected by a transparent shield. Oxygen from Earth was added inside using generators placed on the shield, ensuring a constant oxygen supply. Other generators were designed to generate heat. Facilities were also constructed to extract drinking water. Robots use the extracted water to irrigate the gardens and promote vegetation growth. Of course, this entire Martian setup created by humans needs continuous monitoring by specialists, starting in 2110 when it was completed.



One morning, a security guard came to work to inspect how things were going in his colony, Ares. First, he checked the drinking water extraction facility where everything was running smoothly. After that, he monitored whether the robots were doing their job in the garden, and everything was going as planned. Next, he verified if the oxygen and heat generators were functioning normally, and they were. The last but not least check was for any external threats to the colony. In the distance, two spacecraft could be seen approaching the colony, but they were disregarded. Those spacecraft belonged to the survivors from Venus. After the surviving Venusians managed to escape the hell that occurred on Venus, they headed towards Mars, hoping to find a better life there. Unfortunately, they were already affected by Theia's curse, which was destined to cause further dilemmas on the planet. On the second day, due to the fact that Venusians had started spreading the curse throughout the Ares colony. When the inspector came to work to supervise the colony, he immediately realized that something was wrong with the water extraction facility, and the transmission was abruptly interrupted. The Health Department of Ares Colony issued a state of emergency. A toxic substance unknown had been discovered in that facility, contaminating the water. An order was given for all Ares colonists to flee to other colonies or spacecraft until specialists could fix the problem. The problem was much more severe than it already was because that substance came from Theia's curse. The substance began to appear in multiple places in the colony, and other machinery began to malfunction. Recordings were found from various specialists who tried to solve the problem but went missing. In the first video, someone walked through a building until they opened a door, seeing something terrifying on the floor. It looked like some kind of liquid. Then, a recording of someone descending in an elevator, but the light turned yellow, and the elevator fell. Finally, someone walking outside past a building to the back door, but a yellow light appeared through the door. That terrifying liquid was on the wall, so it's clear that it's a semi-solid liquid. Meanwhile, because the generators were not functioning correctly, the oxygen and heat levels started to rise. Surviving specialists sent an urgent help message to the Humanitas Network for more assistance. Those at Humanitas transmitted an audio message to the Ares colony, telling them to evacuate and that professional help would be sent to investigate. Until the help arrived on Mars, Theia's curse had already contaminated the other colonies, and Martians had nowhere else to live. Because of this, they began to fight for the smallest drop of water. This halted the protection of the planet Mars by protection spacecraft because soldiers had to get involved in the war. This gave Theia a chance to approach Mars without being stopped by protection spacecraft. When Humanitas specialists landed on Mars, it was already too late. They had no choice but to watch the war 'like a show.' Some of them stayed on Mars and began filming the disaster, thinking that something could still be done; others decided it was a lost cause and fled before Theia dominated the entire planet. In space, astronauts could observe something that seemed like flames emerging from the planet's atmosphere. Remnants of recordings and logs were edited and placed in the archive of the Humanitas Network.

Judgement of Titan:

As Venus and Mars had been colonized, another set of spacecraft colonized Saturn's moon, Titan, as it contains liquid water within. The colonies on Titan were constructed in the same manner as those on Mars.

After the tragedy on Mars, Xavier Myron, the commander of Humanitas Station, sent an urgent message to the Titanian colonists at the beginning of 2111, revealing what had happened to the colonies on Mars and Venus, advising them to hide from the clutches of the monster. Thanks to the message, the president of the Titanian colonies, Malcolm Themis, convened a meeting with all the directors of Titanian colonies to discuss new measures for combating external threats. The council took place in Atlas Colony.

The meeting began with Malcolm Themis expressing his perspective on the situation, ironically stating that they should not hide from the entity but prepare to fight in case of an attack. For this reason, he prepared an entire war plan in which he would invest more in defense and military technology, cutting resources allocated to education and public health. A person from the audience named Molly Mavenzine voiced concern about these political decisions that could lead to a generation of uneducated children and health issues. However, Malcolm Themis promised that once the situation calmed down, he would invest additionally in the two areas currently being sacrificed. Wilmer Clement, the commander-in-chief, presented the battle plan. It involved increasing the number of people in the army and preparing them to fight in any environment, whether in a spacecraft or on the surface of Titan. Calvin Eugene, the engineer, showcased the sophisticated military equipment he had developed for effective defense: an orbital cannon firing into the air, a gigantic satellite array shooting lasers into space, laser guns, and laser-equipped helicopters. Wilmer Clement also announced the periods during which preparations would take place: mobilization on February 12, soldier training between February 13 and 27, and weapon delivery on February 24. A man named Britton expressed his outrage at these decisions and questioned whether the increase in the number of people in the army implied a general mobilization of men. Wilmer Clement clarified that it was a partial mobilization for reservists and those with military experience. Britton couldn't contain himself and began expressing his frustration with the absurd decisions made. The cameras filming the council were cut off as the authorities captured Britton, and the image returned at the end of the council. Britton was not seen by anyone after this council.

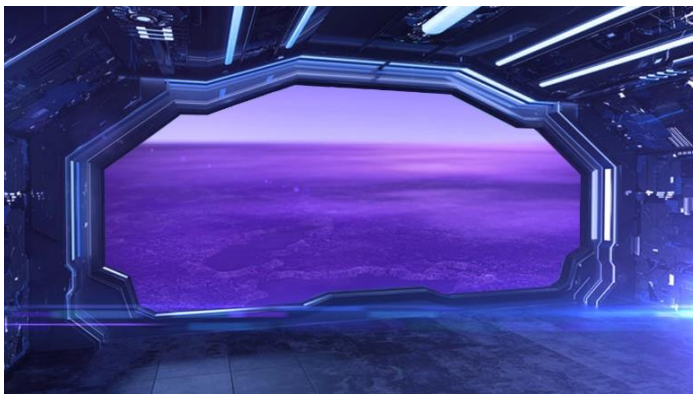
Theia observed that the Titanians were preparing to defend themselves militarily in case it got hold of Titan. Therefore, it devised a strategy to destroy Titan without physically touching it. It went to the sun to infect it with her curse, turning it purple and emitting dangerous radiation. For Theia, this strategy worked perfectly, considering that the Titanians sabotaged themselves by cutting investments in public health. Soon, the devastating consequences were felt. Footage was found featuring two teenagers named Frank and Jerry, who filmed the purple sun, after which Frank became unwell and fainted. Jerry called for help, but it was too late. Another recording was discovered in a hospital, with a doctor scared about the situation and desperately wondering how to treat patients when hospitals were no longer maintained. Eventually, a lockdown order was issued for all Titanian colonies after tens of thousands died in hospitals from a terminal illness. This disease was undoubtedly caused by the purple sun. Finally, a letter written by Malcolm Themis was found, announcing his resignation from the position of president and apologizing for the poor decisions. After writing this letter, he disappeared from public. Survivors of the epidemic took a spacecraft and are now seeking answers to everything that is happening.



The Achilles Protocol:

After the last humans fled from the remaining human colonies, Theia began infiltrating the Humanitas Network data system to hijack it, considering that everyone at Humanitas Station was focused on Titan. One day, the television program was running completely normal until red-tinted glitches appeared, and the broadcast was cut. A technician from Humanitas entered the data systems to investigate what had happened. He conducted troubleshooting to detect the cause of the program hijacking, and the result pointed to an unidentified source. After closing and exiting the data system, he reviewed a video recording from the interior circuits, revealing a yellow light that started to appear before everything went black. He then checked an external security camera recording from the Humanitas spacecraft and noticed something appearing in the background for a split second. Upon leaving the data system, he observed a yellow spot on a television screen and began filming it. His recording abruptly ended as the spot exited the screen and entered the technician, cursing him.

In the meantime, the surviving Titanians navigate through space unsure of what to do next. They will be in for a surprise as they receive a message from the Humanitas Network, informing them that they are the last remaining humans and have the mission to seek the truth so that humanity can be restored to its former glory. Their mission is called the Achilles Protocol. The Titanians fly towards the Humanitas Network spacecraft to discuss the fate of humanity there.

His Faithful Servants:

In the meantime, after the Titanians reached the Humanitas Station, Theia's curse began to spread among those who already lived there due to the corrupted technician. Those who had not yet been cursed locked the others in rooms to protect themselves.

While the Titanians approach the Humanitas Station, the possessed individuals notice that a shuttle is approaching and consider it an opportunity to influence them to join their side. Upon arriving at the station, the Titanians engage in a discussion with Xavier Myron about what needs to be done. One of the possessed manages to unlock the door and discreetly shoots with a concealed weapon in the security room to hide any evidence of their escape. He quietly moves towards the room where Xavier Myron is talking with the Titanians, filming them as they speak. The commander informs the Titanians that many of those living in the shuttle and working for Humanitas have been possessed by an unknown force and have been confined. The Titanians are advised to replace the roles of the researchers and military personnel. Xavier advises them to split into two groups to investigate why the sun is turning purple and what other threats exist in the solar system. After recording them, the possessed individual returns to show his comrades what was discussed. In order for their plan to brainwash the Titanians to work, they begin to pray. They light a fire, as according to their beliefs, the fire will elevate their prayers to the divine. After finishing their prayer, some of them approach the Titanians, pretending that nothing is wrong, so they can secretly curse them on behalf of Theia. The Titanians were not actually possessed but received bad luck from Theia.

A technician from Xavier Myron's team who has not been cursed by Theia managed to find recent footage from various sources in the shuttle and decided to edit them to see what he could detect. The conclusion is that some strange events are happening that could lead to significant developments for humanity."

Helios Travel Inc.:

The Titans who chose to go and investigate the sun boarded a large shuttle rented from the subsidiary company Helios Travel Inc., which specializes in transporting people throughout the solar system. The others went in shuttles made by the Humanitas Network army to ensure the safety of the solar system. The Titans on the research mission took off from Humanitas Station to approach the sun. In the shuttle, one of the travelers filmed the entire journey to have this mission in the archives. During the journey, the Titans are guided by an artificial intelligence named Tourismate. The shuttle travels at half the speed of light, so they will reach near the Sun in about 8 hours. The shuttle will slow down when they reach the asteroid belt to avoid accidents. Then the structure of the sun is presented. The sun is composed of 6 layers: Atmosphere, Photosphere, Convective Zone, Tachocline, Radiative Zone, Solar Core. After the educational material, some entertainment materials are broadcast. The Maximus Fantasticus Bombasticus show is presented, in which the host Popper Poppernickle asks the contestants questions about planet Earth. Those who produced the show were affected by Theia's curse, so the show ended by presenting some suspicious details and then abruptly ending. After the show, when reaching the asteroid belt, footage will be shown outside the shuttle with asteroids floating alongside. After the asteroid belt, images of Mars, Earth, and Venus destroyed by Theia will be shown... although the Earth was entirely destroyed. After the shuttle gets considerably close to the sun, a mechanism analyzes the sun and detects that something is wrong. The particles from the core of the sun are not the ones that should have been, they are unknown. Then it is seen how the sun turns purple and begins to emit dangerous radiation. The Titanians are forced to move away urgently from the sun to avoid getting sick. They send a distress message to the military shuttle. They receive the help message and even the recording from the shuttle from a very long distance. They realize the situation and activate the Achilles Protocol and leave on a mission to save the other Titans. They send a message to Humanitas Station about what is happening and also send the recording. In the meantime, some observations from researchers about a force that seems to manipulate everything from within people have appeared, but nothing is known about this force. Also, those from Humanitas Station have published a picture of Distorted Space that reached the Solar System.

Save Their Souls:

The Titanian military has announced the Achilles Protocol to go and save the Titanian researchers who were trapped near the sun that turned purple and emitted dangerous radiation. While traveling, the Titans discuss their plans with Greg, the commander of the military shuttle. First, they need to rescue the Titans from the research shuttle, and after ensuring they will be treated, their next mission will be to investigate the unknown force that was discovered. After passing through the asteroid belt, the Titans analyze space to detect the signal from the research shuttle. They use the teleportation technique to quickly reach the shuttle and bring it back to Humanitas without the Titans being too affected by radiation. After successfully teleporting the researchers' shuttle near Humanitas Station, both shuttles return. The Titans affected by radiation are examined and treated for diseases caused by radiation. After doctors fought to save as many lives as possible, they had a discussion about the situation: the sun emits unknown radiation that causes terminal diseases in humans, as it happened with Titan before people had to leave the colonies, and this may be linked to the force that seems to dominate the universe. Some analyses theorize that the disease originates from another universe. All the footage from the mission has been edited into a documentary. The next stage of The Achilles Protocol is for people to discover what this force is, hoping to unravel the mystery behind the universe and the human condition. For this reason, the Titans entered the military shuttle and set out in search of the absolute.

Gaze of Heimdall:

The goal of the second mission in the Achilles Protocol is to finally uncover what caused all the phenomena that nearly destroyed humanity. Greg, the commander of the military shuttle, along with the Titans, is considering conducting an analysis of the activity in the solar system to identify any suspicions using a new artificial intelligence named Heimdall. This artificial intelligence has been developed over 11 years, starting from the year 2100, by the team at Humanitas Station.

Greg notices that right next to the sun, there is an object that cannot be identified. Therefore, the Titans send a satellite to the sun to try to investigate the unidentified object. When the satellite gets close to the sun, it starts to orbit around it to find the unidentified object, but immediately a force takes it and destroys it. Fortunately, the recording reaches the military shuttle for analysis. Greg realizes that the unidentified object is a monster. He renames the object "Surtur" and analyzes the monster. The analysis reveals that it has malevolent powers such as manipulating matter, spreading psychic influence, and causing mass destruction. This means that the monster is responsible for the sun emitting deadly radiation. The only interesting thing is that it is composed of unknown elements, which is why it cannot be identified. This raises questions about the origin of this monster, so scientists have decided to analyze the history of Solar System activity to see how this monster ended up here. Going back to April 2, 2111, they observe that the monster was near Humanitas Station, meaning that it is responsible for the database hijacking. Going back to February 5, they observe that the monster is near the sun when the sun transmits purple light and radiates the surface of Titan. Going back even further, they realize that this monster is the same one responsible for the destruction of the planets Mars and Venus. Going back even further, they observe something bizarre: the monster and the moon are practically one and the same, and it is seen how the monster actually collided with Earth billions of years ago when it was still forming. This proves that the monster that has haunted humanity for so long was, in fact, the planet Theia, which also led to the birth of the moon. Now people know that the monster has been Theia all this time; now they need to identify where this planet came from, which apparently is a living being, as such a thing cannot exist in this universe. Therefore, Greg goes back even further to see where Theia came from and, from what they observe, it comes from a place outside the solar system that cannot be identified. Logically, the decision is made to send another satellite to investigate what is in that region that cannot be identified.

While leaving the solar system, the satellite began to feel the influence of a force, causing the image to glitch. The satellite started to slow down as it functioned increasingly poorly. In the background, something white slowly appeared. Meanwhile, it came across a satellite that looked black instead of white. The satellite analyzed the files inside the object and found that it was Voyager 1, the satellite sent into space in the 1970s whose connection was interrupted in the 1990s. In the files, they could see some strange pictures of white space and even some information about what that white space is... it's actually Distorted Space. After the recording, it cuts off. Distorted Space has entered the solar system...

Catalyst of Change:

Distorted Space conquered the entire Solar System, including Humanitas Station, so everything began to function according to the rules of this universe. Everything is reversed: light is black, and black is white. Also, all media instruments are now digital instead of analog. Everything is confusing, and the few remaining survivors have no idea what is happening.

Commander Xavier Myron proposes to everyone to fly through space first and explore this new world to see if they can find something that might help. While traveling and researching, they receive a signal and try to trace its source. Eventually, they discover a planet. They are shocked to find that the planet can communicate through their spacecraft. Simultaneously, the planet doesn't understand what these vessels with living beings are. The planet tells them that they have no business being in this place as it is reserved only for planets like itself. However, Xavier Myron decides to go to the planet and asks Greg to step onto the planet and explore.

Greg will have a camera installed on his suit so that Xavier can see everything Greg sees to ensure he is okay. Greg is teleported to the planet and begins to explore it until he encounters the soul of a deceased person named Alexander. The soul tells him that they arrived here after descending into the Kola Superdeep hole in 1992 and meeting Theia. The soul warns him that Theia intends to destroy and possess as much as possible to fulfill the plans of a much larger being. That being is, in fact, the Supreme Evil. The soul also explains that they are in the first level of the universe called the 'Realm of the Dead' and recommends seeking Theia to destroy it and stop the curse it left upon humanity for so many years. Greg tries to find out from the soul who the much larger being mentioned is, but it cannot provide details for fear of repercussions. It was too late, and the soul was taken by that being. Greg returns to the spacecraft. Xavier decides that they have nothing to do but to follow the soul's advice and travel further.

After some time, Xavier observes that the stars are no longer visible, and they seem to be in an apparently empty space. This confuses the travelers, but they decide to analyze space to see if there is anything invisible hiding. They realize that they are not alone; the area is full of white holes. They analyze these holes and find that they practically function the same as the black holes in the universe they came from, with the only differences being that they do not emit Hawking Radiation and seem to emit matter that is immediately annihilated. They conclude that this matter in Distorted Space is actually being sucked in by the hole. After enough research, they decide to fly further, taking care to avoid the white holes.

After some time, they find that Theia appears in front of them and communicates through the spacecraft. It tells them that they are not allowed to cross this line. The spacecraft begins firing lasers while trying to defend against Theia until the people decide to flee to prepare a battle strategy. Xavier suggests that someone needs to go with a spacecraft carrying a nuclear bomb and detonate it in the core of Theia to kill the being and eliminate the curse. Greg sacrifices himself and is determined to do this. Thus, Xavier returns with the large spacecraft to confront Theia and distract it attention while Greg flies towards the core of Theia. Greg informs Xavier that he is already penetrating the core. Xavier decides that there is no longer any point in fighting Theia and leaves again. Greg reaches the interior in a dark place and sees an orange light. The light is actually Theia's soul, through which the Supreme Evil speaks. The soul asks him if he really thinks he can stop Theia. Greg asks who the light is, and it responds that it is doing everything as it pleases. Greg contradicts, saying he's done with it, and the soul responds that people won't escape definitively anyway. Greg detonates the bomb, and Theia explodes. The curse of Theia is canceled, what Distorted Space had conquered from the Good Universe is recovered, and the planets return to normal. What were called Titanians are now just people living on planet Earth, commemorating Greg's heroic death.

COLLECTION 3

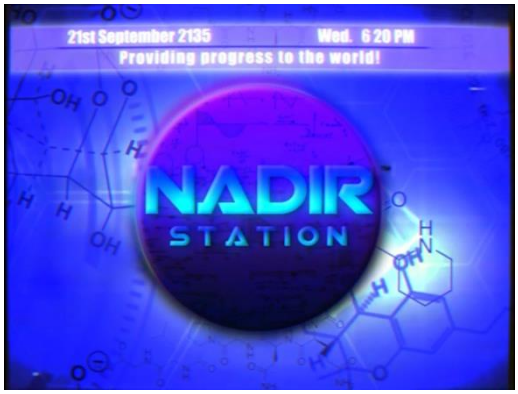
Precursor:

After Theia's elimination, the universe returned to normal, along with planet Earth, and Distorted Space was cast out of the Good Universe. The Supreme Evil, disappointed by Theia's failure, speaks with planet Nibiru about the next plan to destroy humanity. Humans have already learned the nature of evil and its consequences, so they will learn from their mistakes, and everything they do will be for the common good. Because of this, in the year 2112, planet Nibiru will be secretly sent to the edge of the Solar System to affect it, especially Earth, through the interaction of the souls on the planet with Earthlings. Since Theia is dead, Distorted Space will be guarded by other planets. Greg's soul remains trapped in the core of the Supreme Evil and cannot communicate with anyone.

Rise of Nadir:

Meanwhile, humans begin to adapt to life on Earth and reform the countries that existed before the year 2090. In 2135, Greg's son, Brian, establishes an artificial intelligence company called Nadir with the purpose of preserving the technologies and artificial intelligence developed by humans during space colonization, as well as advancing them in the name of knowledge. Additionally, Brian aims to develop new AI software and various types of robots. Brian has multiple personal motivations for this project: On one hand, he has a vague memory of some absolute entity but can no longer recall exactly what it was about, and he hopes to uncover the truth through technological advancements. On the other hand, he strives to make his parents proud through his achievements. Unfortunately, Brian's inventions will eventually be influenced by the malevolent souls from the planet Nibiru, which will use them to harm humanity.

On September 21, 2135, a presentation of Nadir is broadcast on Nadir Station.



The first major invention by Nadir is an artificial intelligence program called Cognitio, designed to provide people with knowledge across various fields, considering the period when humans colonized space and forgot how life was before. The presentation is interrupted as the broadcast is influenced by malevolent spirits from Nibiru. After the interruption, the presentation resumes, introducing the Nadirverse, an application that allows users to interact online in 3D using an Oculus device. The program is interrupted again, and an emergency message announces various issues discovered in Nadir's products. None of them function as intended, except for Heimdall 2.0 and the telepathic device. Mysteriously, footage from a lab shows a light appearing, which is revealed to be a spirit manipulating the inventions. Brian calls a meeting with the programmers to discuss the situation. David defends himself, stating he has 15 years of experience in the field and has no idea how this could have happened. He speculates that it might be a supernatural manifestation, similar to Theia's attack on the database at Humanitas Station in 2111. Brian dismisses David's claim and decides to conduct investigations to identify the responsible parties. Norris intervenes, noting that even Nadir Station's broadcasts are being hijacked. Ultimately, Brian decides to postpone the launch of the products until February 2136 and orders the team to fix the issues by then. Later, as David reviews the code in their programs and machines, he finds nothing wrong with them; everything should work as intended. He tells his colleagues they have no choice but to hastily rewrite the code from scratch.

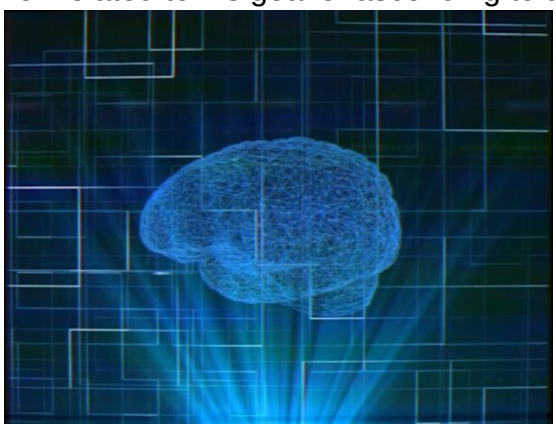
Brian's Interview:

Meanwhile, Brian gives an interview with a journalist. During the interview, Brian talks about his company's goals to help the world improve in all aspects. However, the journalist also asks him about the personal significance of the Nadir company. Brian responds that he wants to make his mother proud and learn more about himself. He is trying to find answers to anything unknown, such as some vague memories he has. Noticing that Brian only mentioned his mother, the journalist asks about his father, but Brian refuses to answer the question.

Mind Over Matter:

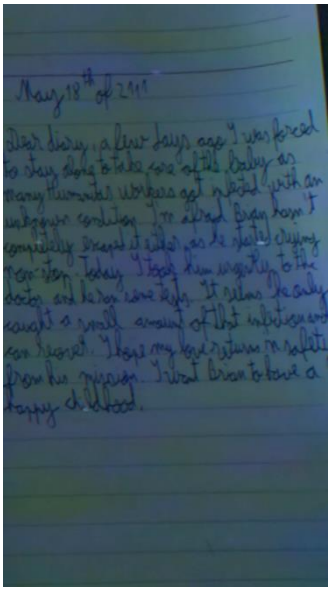
Since the Cognitio AI program is being manipulated by the malevolent spirits of Nibiru, it tends to communicate things to people that are more or less bizarre.

Because Brian struggles with spiritual turmoil related to his goal of ascending to a state where he can communicate with his father, he uses his own creation to seek advice on improving his spiritual life. Cognitio begins by explaining the nature of humanity, which is inclined to desire what it does not have. It then continues by stating that the desire for what one lacks causes suffering. Therefore, to eliminate suffering, one must eliminate its source—desire. To achieve this, Brian must follow the Eight Rules of Self-Denial and, in addition, practice meditation. The purpose of meditation is to help the individual maintain a present mind, free of thoughts about the past or future, and avoid intrusive thoughts. Brian thanks Cognitio for the guidance and tries to put it into practice.



What Brian does not know is that the spirits of Nibiru plan to use these meditative practices to infiltrate people's minds and communicate with them. Brian uses the telepathic device to record his thoughts during meditation. At one point, Alexander takes the opportunity to enter Brian's mind during a meditation session to warn him about a great threat at the edge of the Solar System. Startled, Brian asks Alexander about this warning, but the spirit cannot fully reveal the truth and is forced to leave before something bad happens to him. Brian wakes from his meditation with the conclusion that he is getting closer to achieving his goals.

Because of the meditations, many people have been contacted either by malevolent spirits or benevolent ones. Those contacted by the benevolent spirits try to help the world return to God to defeat the evil in the universe, while those contacted by the malevolent spirits reject this path.



Mother's Diary:

Meanwhile, Brian was tidying up the house when he accidentally came across his mother's journal from her youth. As he flipped thro ugh it, he noticed a paragraph describing her struggles with Brian as a baby due to the spread of Theia's curse at Humanitas Station. Theia's curse was so contagious that even baby Brian was slightly affected by it.Although he wasn't possessed by Theia, he experienced fits of hysteria because he had seen the face of Mors, Theia's master. Those images haunted him throughout his life, even into adulthood. This was one of the reasons he developed technologies—to uncover the cause of all unknown phenomena like this one.

Into the Nadirverse:

Brian decides to enter the Nadirverse to socialize with a friend of his named Dustin. The two meet on the rooftop of a building and tease each other. Then they sit on the edge to admire the city from above. Dustin asks if Brian is feeling okay because he seems preoccupied. Brian shares that he recently discovered something in his mother's journal that he hadn't known before—namely, that he was nearly infected by Theia's curse as a child when people were still living in Humanitas Station, and his mother struggled with him but never told him about it. Dustin tells him to relax because he has a good life thanks to his success. Brian disagrees, saying that material wealth isn't success and that he'll only feel successful when he's completely fulfilled spiritually. Dustin advises him to go and talk to Father Erdwin at a church, as a priest might offer better guidance than an AI. Brian agrees that he has a point and decides to walk to the church for some fresh air. As they're walking down the street, a portal suddenly opens, and a car emerges from it, hitting them. The Nadirverse glitches and then resets.

Brian decides to go into the Nadirverse, to his office, to tell a programmer named David about what happened. Brian believes the incident occurred because of the use of the portal generator within the Nadirverse. He orders David to set new rules so that no one can perform such actions in the Nadirverse again.

After finishing the conversation, Brian heads straight to the church to speak with Father Erdwin. However, when he meets him, strange things begin to happen. Father Erdwin's avatar takes on the appearance of a monster, and the Nadirverse starts glitching. Father Erdwin seems to deliver a cryptic message to Brian. His actual message, spoken in Latin, was: "You are the son of the man who saved the universe, but you are bringing evil back through your ambitions. Your ascent in knowledge will lead you to fall into the vilest part of human nature. What you seek lies in the lowest realm of existence."

Terrified, Brian asks the priest what is happening as Erdwin stares at him intently. Suddenly, Father Erdwin rushes toward Brian and strikes him. The Nadirverse glitches again.

The Looming Shadow:

Because the devices created by the Nadir company are possessed by malevolent spirits from Nibiru, more and more people have come to be possessed by these spirits. Others claim to have had visions of spirits warning them about a cosmic threat that is indirectly attempting to lead the world toward destruction. Meanwhile, young people who had been experimenting with the portal generator in the Nadirverse are forced to use this generator in real life since it was banned in the Nadirverse. However, while driving in the middle of a field, they use the portal to teleport to another city but are instead sent to a completely different destination.

Eventually, journalists learn about this incident. Due to these events, a news report is broadcast on Nadir Station about the disappearance of a car. The media informs the public that it is unknown how the portal was formed or where the car ended up, as it cannot be detected anywhere. What is certain, however, is that people are irresponsibly using the portal generator, prompting the announcement of new laws to limit its use. Following this report, a segment on current social phenomena is presented. The piece begins with a history of sociology. In the pre-colonization era, humanity was destroying the Earth under Theia's influence. After Theia emerged from Earth, humans were forced to colonize other planets while being hunted by it. Following Theia’s destruction, the remaining humans returned to Earth to rebuild life as it was before the colonization era, making efforts to avoid the mistakes of the past. For some years, things progressed normally, and people worked hard to build a civilized society. However, sociologists have recently detected an epidemic of individuals exhibiting bizarre behavior without any medical explanation. Religious figures claim these individuals may be possessed and require exorcisms. The origin of this phenomenon is unknown, as is whether another entity like Theia is once again hunting humanity. After the segment, the presenter interviews Brian about the topic, asking what solutions might exist. Considering that Nadir created the telepathic device capable of displaying everything happening in a person’s mind, Brian expresses his intent to examine cases to understand what is happening to these individuals. The presenter then debates the possible origins of the phenomenon, eventually suggesting that Nadir’s technology could be responsible. Since this is partially true, malevolent spirits manipulate Nadir Station and interrupt the broadcast. Strangely, the station then airs Brian’s experiment. The first person analyzed is possessed by an evil spirit attempting to communicate with Brian about the origins of the universe. The second individual is influenced by the spirit of Alexander, who once again tries to warn Brian. Alexander tells Brian that the planet he saw in the first individual’s vision is the origin of the spirits seeking to bring chaos to the world. The examination reveals that these individuals are indeed possessed by spirits originating from the cosmos.

Unkown Location:

Meanwhile, the young people who got lost in the portal exited the car, which was still moving uncontrollably. In their panic, they jumped out of the car, which then crashed into a tree and caught fire. The two were unharmed, but they had no idea where they were, and they had no signal. One of them was filming when they suddenly saw a ghost and were terrified. Unfortunately, it was one of the malevolent spirits, and it killed them with its energy. The phone was left on the ground, still recording.

Gateway to Vileness:

Brian decided to go into space with a team of astronauts because he believes his origins are tied to the cosmic space due to the social phenomenon of people being possessed by spirits. Once in space, Brian has a conversation with the shuttle captain, Phantasmo, about what needs to be done. They need to identify the planet from which the spirits that possess humans originate. The captain says this can be done using Heimdall 2.0, just as Greg had used it in his time.

At first, Captain Phantasmo enters Heimdall 2.0 and checks the map to see if anything suspicious appears. Eventually, an unidentified object is spotted at the edge of the Solar System. Brian believes it's the planet where the spirits come from. The captain sends a probe to investigate before they head there. Nadir receives footage from the probe showing the planet, when suddenly a spirit appears and destroys the probe. The probe catches fire and begins to fall toward the planet. The footage cuts out. Both conclude that this is clearly the planet where the spirits originate, and they begin to analyze it. They learn from Heimdall 2.0 that it is an unknown planet with origins in Distorted Space, and only one human has ever set foot on it—Gregory. Additionally, the planet appears to be populated by all sorts of spirits. When the crew decides to head toward the planet, a light appears across the entire screen, and everything glitches.

Brian and Phantasmo are confused by this unpredictable event. When the screen recovers, they hear Alexander's voice addressing both the captain and Brian. He explains that the spirit of the planet has possessed Heimdall 2.0 and is trying, along with several other evil spirits, to attack all the systems on the ship in order to reach them and possess them. However, good spirits have also been sent who do not wish to harm them. What the captain must do is drive away the evil spirits while avoiding the good ones. He then explains that an evil spirit can be identified by its deeds. To make the spirits visible, they need to change the map's view to "Waveforms," as this mode can detect invisible things like gravity and other phenomena. A notification appears about something suspicious on Venus. The captain presses "analyze" to view it. A picture of Venusian sports shuttles appears along with a spirit who says it was an athlete that died in a race at the hands of Theia. Brian tells him to leave it alone. Another notification appears for Earth with 3 alerts, and they go to check them. They see a spirit who tells them that it killed a detective to prevent him from revealing hidden information about a film called "Wartime Safety," which was used to promote pro-war ideas. Clearly, the spirit is evil, so they drove it away. The other spirit on Earth was that of a Hyperborean Pathfinder who died during the great meltdown of Antarctica, so they left it alone. Then, they came across the spirit of the creator of the program Astrology Zone from Public 68. Considering that he promoted paganism and had fired his employees for trying to spread a positive message, they decided to drive away this spirit as well. Afterward, they received a notification from Titan's moon indicating that two spirits were there. The first was that of Britton, who had died in prison because of Malcolm's regime. Brian immediately told Phantasmo to leave it alone, as he knew deep down that it was his grandfather, who had tried to defend Greg. They then encountered the spirit of Malcolm, who expressed regret for his political decisions that failed to protect the Titan colonies. They decided not to drive him away because he was repentant. Finally, a light appeared on the map. This light was the spirit of the planet Nibiru, which challenged them to find and destroy it in its home. It then left. Brian and the captain realized that the spirit came from the mysterious planet, so they decided to go there.

Call of Nibiru:

The Nadir shuttle approaches the mysterious planet, but Brian and Phantasmo can observe a signal coming from the planet towards the shuttle. When the signal reaches the shuttle, suddenly a voice speaks through the shuttle's speakers, and they stop, confused. Phantasmo calms Brian and explains that it is the soul of the planet communicating with them. Such an oddity has happened before with similar planets. The voice threatens them, saying that if they intend to do anything to the planet, they should come peacefully, but be aware that a much greater evil lies behind it. Brian and Phantasmo have no choice but to ignore the warning and land on the planet.

When they reach the surface, they use special beams to see through the darkness. They exit the military shuttle and have no choice but to walk around to find clues. At one point, they come across a car that is burning. Phantasmo finds it strange that a car is on the planet, but Brian tells him it is most likely the car that disappeared into a portal. Phantasmo also notices a phone on the ground. The next moment, when they look up, they are startled by a spirit preparing to kill them. The two of them get scared and run. The spirit's energy knocks them down, and they fall to the ground. Fortunately, Alexander's spirit intervenes and heals them of their wounds, and they both get up. Brian, surprised, asks what is happening. Alexander explains that the spirits of all the people who have died throughout history have ended up on this planet called Nibiru. It comes from Distorted Space, and its role was to keep the souls of humans trapped here, preventing them from reaching eternal happiness. After Theia's death, Nibiru was sent to manipulate humanity in place of Theia through evil spirits. The first step to saving the universe from the control of evil is to destroy the planet Nibiru to release the spirits. The second step is to confront the master from Distorted Space to eliminate the origins of evil. Brian also asks Alexander if he knows anything about Greg's spirit. Alexander says he only saw him once when he was physically on the planet, but after that, he never saw him again. Then Alexander continues to explain how to destroy Nibiru. They must fly the shuttle to the north pole of the planet, where there is a hole leading to the planet's core. There, they will encounter the soul of Nibiru, where they must detonate a nuclear bomb and escape before it explodes. Alexander warns them that during the flight, they might encounter evil spirits trying to sabotage them. Brian and Phantasmo return to the military shuttle and discuss that the other Nadir pilots should bring out their smaller hunting shuttles and launch towards the north pole. Brian sends an audio message to the pilots to do so. While flying, they encounter various spirits and shoot at them to distract their attention. Upon reaching the north pole, Captain Phantasmo tells the other pilots to stay on the surface, and they go from the military shuttle to the planet's core to detonate the bomb. When they reach the planet's core, they encounter the soul of Nibiru. Nibiru threatens them, saying that their efforts are futile and they won't be able to handle what's coming. Despite the threats, Phantasmo detonates the bomb and quickly takes off. Brian sends another audio message to the pilots, telling them that the bomb has been detonated and that it's time to flee the planet.

The military shuttle emerges to the surface and meets up with the rest of the hunting shuttles. They watch from behind as the explosion of the planet Nibiru occurs, and all the spirits are released from the planet's captivity. Alexander appears in front of them in his freed state and tells them that the first step was a success. For the second step, they need to reach Distorted Space. To access that space, they must go to the nearest black hole and enter it to reach that dimension. Using Heimdall 2.0, the two search for the nearest black hole, utilizing Waveform mode to detect the gravitational mass in space. After discovering an exceptionally massive gravitational mass, they realize it is a black hole, and they create a portal to travel there. When they arrive, they gather their courage and enter the black hole.

War of Divinity:

After emerging on the other side of the black hole, everyone realizes how different Distorted Space is from the normal universe. Alexander explains that Distorted Space is an alternate universe where all the laws are reversed, including light and darkness, as well as good and evil. He also explains that Distorted Space has three levels: the Realm of the Dead, where they already are; the Realm of White Holes, which they will have to pass through; and the Realm of Divinity, where they will confront the master of this perverse world. They must pass through each level to reach the end.

As they travel, Brian tries to find Greg's spirit by analyzing the liberated souls. No matter how many spirits he examines, Brian is unable to find him. Brian wonders what happened to Greg's soul if all the people who died were trapped on Nibiru. Did he fail to build good enough technologies? Brian begins to doubt himself and his achievements. Meanwhile, the Nadir ship arrives near a planet called Pollutio. The soul of Pollutio tells them that it is a planet of misery where nothing is pure. It then criticizes humanity for having a planet gifted in perfect condition but polluting it to the point of destroying it, making it as corrupted as itself. The Nadir ship moves on and encounters another planet called Bellum. It tells them that it is a planet where everything burns in the fire of rage and hatred. There is no life on it because hatred leads to death. Bellum then comments that the souls of humans had started to resemble hers, and they tried, too late, to escape the consequences. Some of those consequences being the disappearance of the very person Brian has been trying so hard to find. Finally, they come across another planet called Artificialis. It is a planet where there is no nature in any form; everything is dominated only by technology. Artificialis tells them that humanity had the opportunity to enjoy a healthy life surrounded by the beauty of nature, but they chose to pursue their own creations instead of being grateful for what had been created for them. It then reproaches Brian for his mistake, saying that he lacked faith and relied more on his inventions to solve his problems. Brian has another moment of introspection, doubting whether it was right to focus so much on developing new technologies to fulfill his life's purpose. He realizes that he had lost faith in favor of his ambitions and that Dustin was right. He had started socializing more in the virtual world and hadn't even spoken to his mother. He thinks that he had only tried to help humanity and himself as best as he could. He decides that after completing the mission, he will return to what matters most: family, friends, and nature.

Next, Alexander warns them that they have exited the Realm of the Dead and are entering the Realm of White Holes. They must be careful to pass by the white holes without entering them, or they will end up back in their universe. Captain Phantasmo activates the gravitational wave analyzers to detect the white holes and avoid them. After successfully avoiding the white holes, they notice how the white space becomes darker. At one point, they even see some debris floating. They realize that it is from Theia, destroyed by Greg. Brian and Phantasmo are struck by the sight of Theia's remnants, as if they were looking at stars in the sky. Alexander warns them that he and the other spirits will remain here and will not be able to go any further. Brian nearly panics at the thought that Alexander cannot continue with them, but Alexander reassures him that he will watch over them from afar. He then explains that they are about to enter the final level of Distorted Space, the Realm of Divinity, where they will confront absolute evil. Alexander advises Brian that it is important to have faith. Brian then goes through another moment of introspection, mentally preparing for the final confrontation. He feels that this will be a much greater realization than anything he has achieved so far, and that he will become like his father. Brian finally regains his faith after losing it due to his intense focus on technology.

Meanwhile, the Nadir spacecraft continues flying deeper into the level until they hear a voice speaking to them. The voice is that of Supreme Evil. It tells them that its name is Mors and that it is the ruler of the universe they call Distorted Space. It has shaped the universe according to its will in order to destroy the universe from which humans come, so that it can take the place of the Supreme Good, known as Vita. Brian and Phantasmo realize that this entity is the cause of all the evils in their world, as Supreme Evil spread evil by invading their universe with Theia, Nibiru, and ultimately Distorted Space. Brian realizes that Mors is the entity that caused his vague childhood memories. Because of the supremacy of Supreme Evil, Theia had cursed the people of Humanitas Station, including partially cursing him when he was a baby. Because of it, his mother had written in her journal about Brian being partially infected. Brian suggests that they begin to penetrate the entity to find a way to destroy it. Supreme Evil begins to throw asteroids at the spacecraft. Brian communicates with the fighter jets to shoot at the asteroids to destroy them. No matter how many asteroids they destroy, Mors keeps throwing asteroids and even lightning bolts from the fighter jets. Brian and Phantasmo are forced to fly carefully among the asteroids until they reach the heart of the entity. After managing to reach the center of the entity, Brian will have a surprise. He will encounter the spirit of Greg, his father, and will be able to communicate with him for the first time. Brian wants to approach him to take him with him, but then they are faced with Mors' eyes, staring at all the people in the Nadir. They begin to feel pain and suffering and start praying. The spirits of all the people in history hear the cry for help from those in the Nadir, who are in the Realm of Divinity. There is nothing they can do but pray for their safety. Mors is a reality that cannot be physically confronted through battles, only through faith can it be confronted. The power of prayer and faith ultimately manage to destroy Absolute Evil once and for all.

After the great explosion, Brian finds himself floating on clouds and gets scared, but Greg, his father, calms him down. He tells Brian that he has entered eternity. Through these words, Brian realizes that he has died. Then the Supreme Good, also known as Vita, speaks to him. Vita tells him that he and his father, Greg, were part of the divine plan to save humanity from the diabolical influences of Mors, who controlled an alternate universe he created to destroy what the Supreme Good had made and take its place. Due to the destruction of Supreme Evil, now everyone has access to Vita, both the living and those who have already passed away. Brian finally realizes that he has fulfilled his purpose in life. Through his inventions, he was able to detect the origins of evil and destroy it in service to humanity, while also communicating with his father for the first time. But he has a sad realization: he understands that his mother is still alive and is now grieving his death. Brian will have no choice but to wait until his mother also passes away, so they can all reunite. On Earth, humanity commemorates the death of Brian Alden, and he is regarded as a hero as important as his father, Gregory.

GREG'S FAMILY STORY

Greg was born in the year 2090, the year Earth was destroyed by Theia. Greg's family lived on a spaceship programmed to travel to Titan, Saturn's moon. From birth, Greg was blessed by the Supreme Good with an innate inclination to always fight for justice.

When the colonies on Titan were established in 2110, Greg was 20 years old and decided to enlist in the army due to his inclination to serve. The Titanian colonies were governed by Malcolm Themis, while the Titanian army was led by Wilmer Clement. Greg was a disciplined soldier who was always loyal to orders and performed his duties with great dedication and love. Despite his young age, Greg was far more skilled than the other soldiers, which impressed everyone, including Commander Wilmer Clement, earning him the privilege of advancing in rank. Greg found success not only in his professional life but also in his romantic life, as he married Gloria. Shortly afterward, Gloria became pregnant with their first child. Greg and Gloria formed a beautiful family, but things were not destined to last forever.

At the beginning of 2111, Xavier Myron, the commander of Humanitas Station, warned Malcolm Themis about the creature Theia, which had already destroyed the colonies on Venus and Mars. Malcolm convened a council to discuss political decisions. Malcolm believed the army needed to be mobilized for war in case Theia attacked. As a result, military commander Wilmer Clement prepared a plan to mobilize reservists on February 12 and have them trained by February 27. These decisions caused panic in Greg's family, as Greg was likely to be called to war. During the council, Britton, Greg's father, attempted to protest the measures but was arrested. However, all the agitation proved futile, as by the time mobilization was set to begin, Theia had already manipulated the Sun to irradiate Titan, causing illness among the population. Fortunately, Greg, along with Gloria and his mother, avoided falling ill by boarding a spacecraft intended to evacuate the Titanian population into space. Tragically, Greg's father died in prison.

The spacecraft brought the last surviving Titanians to Humanitas Station. During this time, Gloria gave birth to a boy they named Brian. This child was also blessed by the Supreme Good to fight against evil. Meanwhile, most of the workers at Humanitas Station were cursed by Theia and subsequently imprisoned. When the Titanians arrived, they were divided into two teams: one for research and the other for military duties. Due to his success, Greg was appointed the military commander of Humanitas Station. Meanwhile, Gloria and baby Brian struggled to adapt to their new life at the station. Unfortunately, after the workers possessed by Theia escaped their confinement to spread Theia's curse among the Titanians, part of the curse reached baby Brian. Although he did not become possessed, he experienced visions of the Supreme Evil, causing him to cry excessively and leaving him with vague memories into adulthood. Greg embarked on a mission to rescue the researchers on a spacecraft exposed to solar radiation and returned them safely to Humanitas Station. He then sought to uncover what had happened to humanity during this time using the A.I. program Heimdall. Greg learned Theia's true nature and origins, identifying it as coming from outside the Solar System, from an uncharted region called Distorted Space. Greg eventually descended to the planet Nibiru to gather more information, where he was approached by the spirit of Alexander. Alexander informed him about Theia and Distorted Space. Greg then continued his journey until he confronted Theia. In the end, Greg chose to sacrifice himself to destroy Theia and her curse, allowing the entire Solar System to return to normal. Greg's spirit remained trapped in the Supreme Evil.

In the year 2135, at the age of 24, Brian founded a company called Nadir, aimed at preserving technologies developed during space colonization while also advancing new innovations. On one hand, Brian carried a vague, inexplicable memory buried deep in his subconscious and sought to uncover its meaning through technological and intellectual progress. On the other hand, he wanted to make his parents proud—especially his father—by becoming a successful individual like Greg. Additionally, he dreamed of finding a way to communicate with his deceased father. Brian became so focused on his work that he stopped speaking with his mother and even lost his faith. These issues took a toll on Brian's mental health, leaving him internally restless. Along with his company, Brian developed revolutionary software and devices designed to advance humanity. However, the spirits from Nibiru possessed these devices, using them as a means to infiltrate humans. Brian first noticed something wrong with the devices when they were possessed, prompting Nadir to postpone the launch of all products until February 2136. After the products were seemingly repaired and released, Brian gave several interviews about these achievements. In one interview, Brian admitted that these machines also served a personal purpose: he wanted to accomplish great things to make his family proud. A hidden goal of his was to connect with his father's spirit, whom he never had the chance to meet. Brian's lifestyle as a busy scientist, combined with his emotional instability stemming from his father's absence, led him to rely on his AI, named Cognitio, to ask for advice on improving his spirituality. Following the AI's guidance, Brian accidentally contacted the spirit of Alexander, who warned him of an external threat. Meanwhile, the spirits began spreading to Earth and possessing humans. One day, while cleaning his house, Brian stumbled upon an old journal belonging to his mother. In the journal, Brian discovered a confession that he had almost been possessed by Theia's curse as a baby at Humanitas Station. What he read deeply unsettled him. After these strange events, Brian decided to enter the Nadirverse to talk to his friend Dustin about his feelings.

Dustin advised him to speak with Father Erdwin about his spiritual needs, as Brian had long since lost his faith and was living an unhealthy lifestyle. However, the Nadirverse session was interrupted when a car suddenly emerged from a portal. Brian first reported this bizarre occurrence to his colleagues before heading to see Father Erdwin. When he arrived, Erdwin had already been possessed by an evil spirit and attacked him. The world was becoming increasingly aware of the social phenomenon of possessed humans, though the cause remained unknown. Brian took several individuals and tested them using the telepathic device to uncover the origins of the phenomenon. In one person, he saw a mysterious planet destroying Earth. In another, he saw Alexander again, who told him that the spirits causing chaos on Earth originated from the planet Brian had seen earlier. Brian decided, along with his team, to embark on a space mission to locate the mysterious planet. Deep down, Brian hoped that by uncovering the secret behind these spirits and the planet, he might also learn something about his father. Together with Captain Phantasmo, Brian realized they needed to use Heimdall 2.0 to detect the mysterious planet. Once detected, the planet's spirit began to possess Heimdall, along with other spirits inhabiting the planet. Phantasmo had to expel the malevolent spirits. When it came to Britton, Brian immediately told the captain not to expel him, knowing deep inside that this was his grandfather, who had tried to prevent Greg from being mobilized for war. After sparing another spirit, the spirit of the planet Nibiru appeared, encouraging Brian and Phantasmo to set foot on the planet to confront it. Realizing they had no other choice, they agreed to go. With Alexander's guidance, Brian and Phantasmo found a way to destroy the planet by detonating a bomb at its core. When the planet was destroyed, all the spirits ever trapped on Nibiru were set free. This marked the completion of the first stage of their mission.These encounters made Brian reflect deeply on his decisions and the way he had lived his life. Alexander then told them to enter a black hole to reach Distorted Space. The second stage of their mission involved eliminating the ruler of Distorted Space.In the first realm of Distorted Space, Brian and Phantasmo encountered three planets: Pollutio, Bellum, and Artificiallis, each symbolizing different stages of human history. After successfully passing through the second level, Alexander informed them that he could no longer continue with them, as he risked annihilation by the evil being. Brian felt frightened, but Alexander advised him to have faith. Brian meditated on all these events and resolved that, after completing his mission, he would completely change his way of life. Eventually, they confronted Mors, the ultimate evil controlling Distorted Space. Brian realized that Mors was the entity he had seen when he was almost possessed by Theia. A fierce battle ensued, with Mors hurling asteroids at their ships. The fighter jets' attempts to strike Mors were futile, as he could electrocute them. Brian and Phantasmo piloted their ship toward Mors' core, where they encountered an unexpected surprise: the spirit of Greg, Brian's father. Finally, Brian's long-held wish to communicate with his father came true. But then Mors' eyes opened, unleashing a wave of suffering upon everyone in the ship. The only way to stop Mors was through the collective faith of all humanity. Once this immense power succeeded in destroying Mors, Brian and his crew perished but ascended to Vita, the Supreme Good. In Vita, Brian was able to live eternally alongside his father, Greg, and later his mother, once she passed away. On Earth, Brian's ultimate sacrifice, much like Greg's, was honored by all.

- THE END -